Introduction

Young and inexperienced parents often give a name to their child without considering its meaning, correct pronunciation and spelling, or even its musicality. It is only once in a lifetime that a child can be named, therefore it is only fitting that all parents make a well-considered choice of appellation in terms of sense, sound and orthography. It is with this precise aim that this dictionary of names has been prepared.

Muslims all over the world have mostly preferred Arabic-Islamic names to names from Persian and other oriental languages like Turkish and Hebrew. In this selection, however, a good number of non-Arabic names have also been included, because of their present popularity with Muslims. We should stress here that the very best dictionaries have been consulted to elicit their most exquisite meanings. The majority listed in this selection as Turkish are actually Arabic, these having been passed on to us through Turkish written in Arabic script, e.g. Rifat رفعت, Nikhat نكهت, Hashmat حشمت, etc. These can otherwise be written with a ta marboota or the round ta as رفعة, نكهة, حشمة. This, however, is not in vogue. Certain names like Hiba هبة, Ama أمة, Ayesha عائشة, etc. have been written with ta marboota, because they have been directly passed on to us through the Arabic language, and generally apply to women. Some Hebrew examples have also been included, because they are the names of prophets.

In this compilation, mostly single-word names have been listed, e.g. Bashir, Basim, Fatima, etc. However, compound names can be made by prefixing, suffixing or inserting additional components. For example, Bashir can be used as part of a compound, as in Muhammad Bashir Ahmad, or Bashir Ahmad Kashif or Kashif Bashir Muhammad Ahmad. However, we should be careful in making composites of this kind, for, while Khalilullah, or Khalilur Rahman, meaning "the friend of Allah" are grammatically correct and appropriate in meaning, combinations such as Akhlaqur Rahman or Akhlaqullah, i.e. Allah's morals, may be unacceptable.

With the changing times, trends and needs are also changing. On application forms and in official documents, we are generally required to write a name consisting of three components, i.e. first name, middle name and last name. In this case, the first is generally that of the person concerned, while the middle one is his father's and the last is the name of his grandfather or of his family. To save future generations from difficulties and embarrassments, we too should fall in line with this development. However, this three-component name need not necessarily conform to the foregoing formula, in that the three parts or components may or may not refer, either individually or jointly, to parentage or the family. For example, Muhammad Ahmad Saleem, or Saleem Ahmad Khan, or Tameez Fatima Bano or Fatima Bano Khan, etc., can be names of individuals, without any of their components having familial connotations.

Typical Arabic sounds have been represented as they are ordinarily pronounced in English, Persian, Turkish or Urdu. For example the hard 'h' or the deep glottal 'a' have been written as 'h' and 'a' as in Hamidullah and Abdullah. Only the deep glottal 'k' has been transcribed as 'q'.

Though these Arabic-Persian-Islamic names are generally favoured by Muslims and Arabic-speaking Christians, there is an increasing trend among educated Indians, irrespective of their religious affinities, to choose mellifluous Arabic names, which have good meanings. The entries in this dictionary have been arranged in English alphabetical order to permit quick and easy reference for those who do not read Arabic script, but who would like, nevertheless, to give their children soft-sounding and meaningful names of Arabic, Persian or Turkish origin.

We do hope that this dictionary will serve as an excellent guide for responsible parents in their quest for appropriate and meaningful names for their children, of which the latter may feel proud when they come to know their significance.

I would like to thank my student, Shah Nawaz, for compiling an appendix of names of historical importance, such as those of the companions of the Prophet Muhammad, etc. This can be found at the end of the book.

A Dictionary of Muslim Names

Though these Arabic-Persian-Islamic names are generally used by Muslims and Arabic-speaking Christians, there is an increasing trend among educated Indians, irrespective of their religious affinities, to choose soft-sounding Arabic names, which have good meanings. Names in this dictionary have been arranged in English alphabetical order to permit quick and easy reference by those who do not read Arabic script, but who would, nevertheless, like to give their children soft sounding and meaningful names of Arabic, Persian, Urdu and Turkish origin.

This dictionary will serve as an excellent guide for responsible parents in their quest for appropriate and meaningful names for their children, of which the latter may feel proud when they come to know their significance.
